

CM620 Somewhere over the RINGBO

Nodes with large-scale town facilities are created in the intersections with the main roads and infrastructure.

All other neighbourhood-scale programs are placed along the ring.

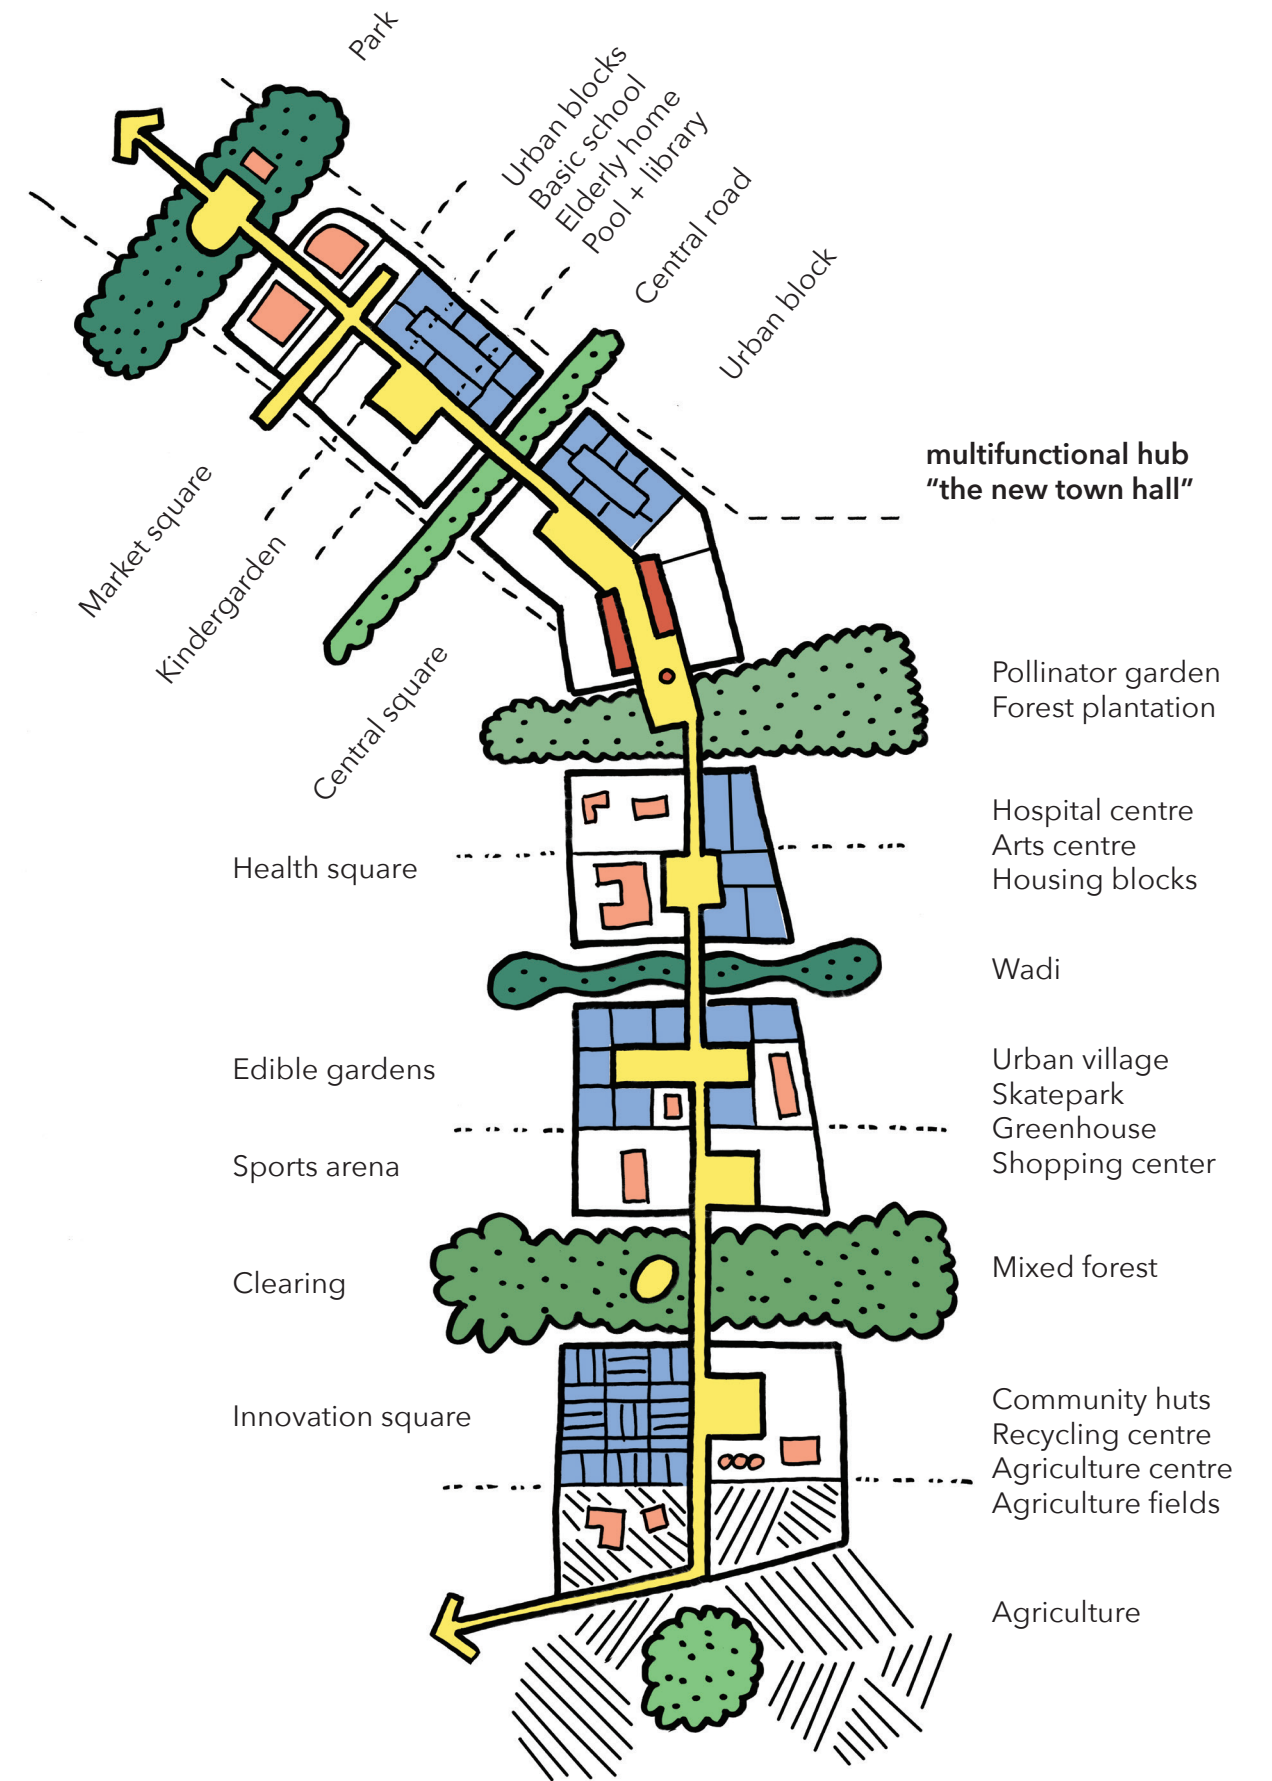

The ring will be a biodiversity conduit, connecting diverse transversal natural spaces and reducing the car mobility.

Nature and culture will be embedded into the urban fabric.

The ring will concentrate dense housing developments providing a wide range of lifestyles.

Each development will have direct access to nature and proximity to social facilities.

multifunctional hub "the new town hall"

Pollinator garden
Forest plantation

Hospital centre
Arts centre
Housing blocks

Wadi

Urban village
Skatepark
Greenhouse
Shopping center

Mixed forest

Community huts
Recycling centre
Agriculture centre
Agriculture fields

Agriculture

A clear structure: RINGBO

Rimbo currently lacks a clear structure and urban hierarchy. A ring that encircles the central Garden City area is created by taking advantage of the voids generated by the waterfront in the South, the burying of electrical lines in the West and the old railway in the East.

An open system for diversity

The ring connects all scales and provides a structure for densification and for human-scale proximity. It is a clear gesture that maximises the resilience of the entire town by encouraging maximum biodiversity and a variety of programs and lifestyles.

A backbone for vibrant life

Green-blue transversal connections intersect with the main street organizing and segmenting the urban fabric into distinct Superblocks. Each Superblock allows for a different style of living, always following the Garden City principles while adapting to higher density models.

A welcoming central square

A vibrant central square benefits from the direct connection to the multifunctional hub. The new urban blocks with active plinths create a lively human-scale densified centre, welcoming diverse groups of people who use it simultaneously.

A lively main street

A circular route provides easy access to essential facilities and natural areas by foot or bike. Carefully organized, this diverse sequence of spaces creates an exciting and pleasant journey for everyday life, encouraging people to explore and enjoy Rimbo.